3. 閱讀測驗(36~40 題，共 5 題)

Children with learning disabilities struggle with reading, writing, math, and understanding spoken language. They were once seen as less intelligent than their peers. However, studies show that these children often have normal or high intelligence. Their brains simply process information differently, which is why traditional teaching methods don't work well for them.

Luckily, many educators work with speech therapists and doctors to develop special techniques to help these children focus and improve their skills. Personalized approaches help many children with learning disabilities make great progress in school and build their confidence and interest in learning.

In short, it's important to support children with learning disabilities. With the right help, most can overcome their challenges and enjoy school.
